24/7 TECH SUPPORT: CALL 800-205-1110

IT'S NOT JUST AN INCONVENIENCE

Every month we publish the Iowa One Call Locate ad. There is a reason. We have reprinted a portion of an article published in ISE Magazine by Ashley Zolot. We believe this article explains the importance of calling Iowa One Call Before You Dig and why it is so important. So next time before you dig that hole, call Iowa One Call.

The days of underground communication lines being less critical are over.

A decade ago, communication service interruption was not much more than an inconvenience. A damaged coax cable or phone line certainly wasn't on most people's radar as a critical issue. Today it is a different and more connected world. For many households, if the communication line is damaged it means there's no working from home, no learning from home, and no entertainment at home. In an even more connected household, a damaged communication line could impact home security, the thermostat, and even the refrigerator. The days of losing just entertainment and experiencing a relatively minor inconvenience are over.

The underground communications infrastructure is the unseen framework of connectivity. Critical network is a risk of being damaged anytime a homeowner, professional excavator, or even the utilities themselves are digging or "moving the earth". The message of 811, "Call Before You Dig", is spread far and wide because calling or clicking before you dig is the first step to protecting that connectivity.
